BIBLE BEEF?

CNN

It's not every day a Bible verse lights up social media, but a relatively obscure verse from the Hebrew Bible—what Christians call the Old Testament—was trending on Twitter worldwide Thursday.

The verse, Exodus 23:1, offers this admonition: "You shall not spread a false report. You shall not join hands with the wicked to act as a malicious witness." (New Revised Standard Version)

It comes in a section following Moses' bringing the Ten Commandments down from Mount Sinai. "Exodus 23:1" also is the title of a new song from rapper Pusha T, which may explain why it's trending.

In the song, Pusha T aims verbal barbs at someone who he says wronged him. Hip-hop websites have speculated that someone is fellow rapper Drake.

"Beef is best served like steak/ well done/ get a gun in your face," Pusha T raps in the song, which makes no mention of the Bible verse but certainly channels its spirit.

And the rapper cited the verse Thursday when he tweeted: "Do not spread false reports. Do not help a wicked man by being a malicious witness." That's the New Living Translation of Exodus 23:1.

DESPERATELY SEEKING TWEETS

Nothing like an out-of-context tweet to shed some light on a potential beef. Here are a few selected dispatches that may or may not have anything to do with getting that Bible verse trending. REDEYE

Lil Wayne WEEZY F

@LilTunechi

"[Bleep] pusha t and anybody that love em"

Pusha T @PUSHA_T

"Do not spread false reports. Do not help a wicked man by being a malicious witness." @MrTeriusNash.

The Book of Exodus tells the story of the Israelites fleeing from bondage in Egypt, wandering in the desert in the years before they reach Israel. Exodus 23:1 comes not long after the story of God's parting of the Red Sea so the Israelites could escape, a tale that established Moses as a hero.

After Moses returns from Sinai and delivers the Ten Commandments, he goes on to explain God's laws in greater detail. The laws dictate how the Israelites are to function as a society, regarding everything from property rights to the conduct of annual festivals.

"This verse is understood by the rabbis to mean two separate things," Rabbi Shmuel Herzfeld from Ohev Sholom, the National Synagogue in Washington, wrote in an email to CNN, referring to Exodus 23:1.

"The great medieval commentator Rashi understands the first half of the verse to mean: 'Don't accept a false report or malicious rumors about someone,'" Herzfeld said. "Other commentators say the first part of the verse means don't spread false rumors.

"The second part of the verse has a slightly different meaning. It means: 'Don't convince another person to join with you and offer false testimony,'" Herzfeld wrote, noting that Jewish law requires two witnesses for testimony to be heard.

Wise words from Barbie

Jen Kim
» redeye@tribune.com

My name is Barbara Millicent Roberts, but you can call me Barbie. My hair hasn't changed in more than half a century; my breasts are now perkier than ever. I am 53 years old.

You could say I'm a cultural icon. Andy

Warhol once painted me, and I've been in a couple of movies with Tom Hanks. I married someone I thought I'd spend the rest of my life with, but he wasn't who I thought he was and took off in my pink convertible, never to be seen again.

I lived in Malibu with my friend Stacy for a while in something I can only call a dream house. But the hot sun was making my skin melt, so I moved to Chicago. I heard the improv scene was really good here, and I do have some acting experience, so I thought I'd give it a shot. Turns out, they want more than just a "pretty face," so I've been keeping a relatively low profile these days—living in a penthouse in the Gold Coast and doing a lot of yoga. I'm also working on my memoir—it's called "I No Longer Love Shopping and Pizza"—and dating a much younger man. I haven't told him my real age—what's the point? He wouldn't believe me anyway.

My life had been going pretty smoothly, until I saw HER: Valeria Lukyanova, some sad 21-year-old Ukrainian girl who is going around telling everyone that she's me.

I get it. Some people think of me as a role model—practically every woman

(and some men) I've met says she loved me when she was growing up. But to actually become me? Now that's something I wouldn't recommend.

First, it's impossible. Have you seen me? Do you know my proportions? I know I talk about pizza all the time, but do you think I've ever actually eaten it? I haven't eaten anything in 10 years. I don't even have to wear a bra; it's like my body is impervious to the laws of gravity.

Second, my life is not as glamorous as it seems. In fact, there's been a lot of pain in my past. Somewhere along my career, I just started to feel like I was an object to people.

Sure, I worked as a flight attendant, a doctor and, one year, as an African princess, but it always felt like the focus was on my looks and less on my ability as a person.

I am more than a pretty face whose measurements are for—ever 36-18-33. I am an avid rock climber, a voracious reader (I just finished "The Art of War") and recently became a Buddhist. And I have to say, doing these things in the twilight of my life is so much more rewarding than my "perfect" youth in Malibu. If I could do it all over again, I would never have chosen the celebrity path.

I feel sorry for you, Valeria. You are so young. You have your whole life ahead of you—a life that doesn't have to be pumped full of collagen and silicon. Be anything else—a flight attendant, a doctor, an African princess. If you don't, like me, you'll soon realize that a life of plastic is anything but fantastic.

WATER WATCH

PARK DISTRICT ROLLS OUT NEW SYSTEM TO MONITOR BACTERIA LEVELS

Chicago Tribune

As the lakefront officially opens to swimmers Friday, the Lake Michigan shoreline joins the cutting edge in the war on bacteria after decades of using day-old water samples to decide whether to close beaches.

In Chicago, the Park District will use a new high-tech system that uses computer software to give “real-time” predictions of bacteria counts based on factors such as water temperature, modeling of the lake bottom and wave action monitored by buoys.

And Chicago beachgoers will almost certainly have more time in the water, as city officials announced that starting this year, they will close the beaches only when sewer overflows have contaminated the water. The rest of the time, they will post data for would-be swimmers, who then can decide to enter the water at their own risk.

Under the previous system, daily water samples were cultured for E. coli, which was considered a marker for other, more dangerous bacteria. When the results came back 18 hours later, officials would determine whether to close beaches based on data that already was a day old.

“Closing the beach [based on high bacteria counts] was always frustrating,” said Cathy Breitenbach, director of lakefront operations for the Park District. “But this was a frustration that beach managers have had all over the country.”

The system often annoyed sun-deprived beachgoers who had dragged their coolers across the sand only to find the water off-limits.

High bacteria counts forced the Park District last year to bar swimming at the city’s 24 beaches for a combined 36 precious summer days. Under the new criteria, the water would have been off-limits only once.

Public health officials were as aggravated as anyone under the old system, knowing they were basing their decision on data that were at least 18 hours old, said Sam Dorevich, a public health researcher at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

“It was really the worst of all worlds in terms of [beach] management,” Dorevich said. “[Deciding whether to close the beach] was like flipping a coin. You’re issuing a swim advisory that isn’t necessary today, but it was for people who swam yesterday.”

HOW IT WORKS

The Park District has installed white boards at beaches that will be updated to show predicted bacteria counts and the results from the previous day’s sampling. When levels exceed EPA standards, instead of a swim ban, a swim advisory—marked by a yellow flag posted in the sand—will be issued. Bans will be issued only when there is a sewer overflow that sends sewage into the lake, which happened only once last year, according to Park District data.

Predictive modeling and faster testing systems are key advances in protecting public health, and beach managers across the Great Lakes have been moving away from the sampling-based tests for years, said Karen Hobbs, a policy analyst for the National Resources Defense Council.

“Predictive modeling is absolutely a step in the right direction. ... I would put Chicago’s efforts squarely in the middle of what’s going on in the [Great Lakes] basin,” she said.

KNEE JERK REACTION

Bacteria in lake water can cause ear infections, pinkeye, rashes and gastrointestinal illness in swimmers. We asked RedEye staffers to weigh in on whether they are keen on taking a dip in Lake Michigan.

Georgia Garvey

After the umpteenth time my legs burned (yes, with red bumps all over) after wading into Lake Michigan, I decided I’d rather sleep with the fishes than with the E. coli in there.

Chris Sosa

Nay. Beach volleyball, on the other hand? Never a bad time for that.

Brian Moore

Unless you’re refilling your water bottle from the lake, swimming is fine. Just shut yo mouth!

CLOSED FOR BUSINESS

In Chicago, last year saw the fewest beach closures since 2008.

P-Fitz's next move? He's not quite sure

Chicago Tribune

U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald said it was not an easy decision to step down next month after nearly 11 years in the powerful office, but he said it's healthy for a change at the top.

Fitzgerald reiterated that he has no career plans at this point—though he ruled out running for an elected office—and said he will take the summer to mull over his options.

"I thought this was the right time," he told a news conference Thursday, adding that having a "fresh view, a fresh set of eyes" are good for the office. "It's important that there be change."

"I have to figure what I'm doing next," Fitzgerald continued. "I don't now, and that's sincere."

He made it clear he "loves public service" but that he will have to weigh his family responsibilities in considering his next career move. Fitzgerald married in his 40s and has two young children. He said he would love to stay in Chicago, but it was clear he wasn't certain where his next job could take him.

When asked whether he has ruled out elected political office, he said without hesitation: "Yes ... I'm not wired for political office."

Fitzgerald drew laughter at his news conference when he said his phone malfunctioned while talking Wednesday to Sen. Dick Durbin, who will decide the next U.S. attorney. "He may have had a conversation with me that I don't know about," he said in answer to a question whether he would offer advice to Durbin on his successor.

He praised federal prosecutors and agents, crediting them with the bulk of the success he has enjoyed in his record-long run as U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Illinois.

When a reporter asked him if he could see himself on the opposite side of the courtroom in his next job, Fitzgerald quipped, "Can you see me as a defense attorney?"

Chicago sandwiches headed to TV

Sandwiches from two Chicago restaurants will be featured on new TV show "Adam Richman's Best Sandwich in America," which debuts June 6 on the Travel Channel. The 4-Courser Sandwich from The Fifty/50 and the classic Italian beef sandwich from Al's Italian Beef will be pitted against 28 other sandwiches from 27 cities selected by host Richman.

Man leaves robbery empty-handed

A man dressed in a hard hat and a safety vest tried to rob a Lincoln Park bank Thursday morning, but left empty-handed, according to the FBI. The man entered the Citibank branch, 2001 N. Halsted St., just after 11 a.m. and demanded money from a teller, said FBI Special Agent Joan Hyde, in an email Thursday afternoon. He walked away with nothing.

2 seriously hurt in Englewood shooting

Two people were shot and seriously wounded in Englewood on Thursday morning, authorities said. The two, a man and another man or boy, were shot in the 6200 block of South Honore Avenue about 10:15 a.m., authorities said. One victim was taken to Stroger Hospital, the other to Mount Sinai Hospital, both in serious-to-critical condition. TRIBUNE

Egypt's first elections find voters polarized

4 CAIRO Egyptians, choosing their leader freely for the first time in their history, voted for a second day Thursday in what appears to be a fraught contest between Islamists and former officials of ousted President Hosni Mubarak.

After six decades under authoritarian, military-backed rule, Egypt's 50 million voters may decide to entrust the most populous Arab nation to an Islamist president for the next four years, as well as the Islamist-led assembly they chose earlier.

But secular figures such as ex-Arab League chief Amr Moussa, 75, and Mubarak's last premier, Ahmed Shafiq, 70, are in with a chance, appealing to Egyptians wary of radical change.

With first-round voting almost over, Egyptians seemed increasingly polarized between those determined to avoid handing the presidency back to men linked to Mubarak's era and those who fear Islamists could sweep governing institutions.

Some voiced fears of a backlash on the streets, particularly if Shafiq, who like Mubarak was an air force commander, triumphs—protesters hurled stones and shoes at Shafiq when he voted in Cairo on Wednesday in the only notable election violence.

"If Shafiq or Moussa wins, they will create a revolution. Everyone will go down to Tahrir again," said one voter, Sherif Abdelaziz, 30, who backs the Muslim Brotherhood's

The mother of Khaled Said, the activist whose death in 2010 at the hands of police helped galvanize anti-Mubarak protests, also derided "feloul," or remnants of the old order.

"Khaled died for his country. Youth like him are entitled to a better future. If any of the feloul win, it would be because the vote was rigged. Egyptians will never retreat from their revolution," Said's mother, Leila, told Reuters by telephone.

MODERN INTELLIGENCE FOR A MEAN ECONOMY

Retirement planning? Ha! That's a good one.

YOUNG MONEY

Megan Crepeau

 » redeye@tribune.com

Here's a fun joke: retirement planning.

Haaaaa, I can't plan for next week, let alone age 65. I'm worrying about next month's rent, not my next five decades of health care. I'll reach retirement age in 2053. 2053, people!

Well, actually, 2053 might not be great for retirees. Safety nets such as Social Security and Medicaid are somewhat in flux, and who knows what state they'll be in 50 years from now. It's more important than ever to take responsibility for your own retirement right now.

And, by the way, when I say now I mean absolutely as soon as possible. The sooner you sock away money for retirement, the sooner you'll start earning interest—your money works for you, no matter how little you're setting aside. And eventually, if you play your cards right, your retirement will be less Grampa Simpson and more Cialis ad.

If you have a job that offers 401(k) benefits, this is really easy. If you don't, then it's still pretty easy, but the perks aren't as good. Here's the deal:

If you can get a retirement plan from your employer, and you haven't yet, let me know so I can come over to your workplace and slap you around. This is STUPID easy, people. Make an appointment with HR and sign up for a 401(k). You can designate how much money will come out of your paycheck each week (this is all pre-tax, by the way). Here's the best part: Most companies will match your contributions up to a certain point. That's free money from your employers. That money will be invested in a mix of stocks and bonds, and if you start early enough, you can ride out any stock-market bumps and glitches before you retire.

If you're self-employed, unemployed or just stuck somewhere without benefits, you still can make good retirement decisions. Think about starting a Roth Individual Retirement Account. They're very flexible—you can withdraw money at pretty much any point without any penalties. That means if something comes up—medical expenses, for example—you won't get slammed with a tax penalty for taking money out of a Roth IRA like you would with a 401(k). That makes it a great choice for supplemental long-term savings, too, if you have a 401(k) and you want to feel extra righteous. The drawback here is you'll have to pay taxes on your contributions, but you won't have to pay on any interest you earn.

I won't lie to you. Commitment to saving like this is going to be hard. The temptation to pull money out will be strong, and sometimes you'll need to give in to it, because life happens. But the sooner you start, the happier "Future You" will be.

JUST ASKING

When it comes to financial stuff, the thought-bubble above your head might contain more question marks than you'd care to admit—questions so basic you hesitate to mention them. We get it. We feel the same way. Hence, our dumb question of the week.
TONY PEREGRIN
FOR REDEYE

On your W-4, what's the difference between taking 'O' and 'I' exemptions?

Employers use the information you put on a W-4 form to calculate the federal and state taxes they'll withhold from your paycheck each pay period. Think of it as kind of an advance payment on income taxes. You can lower the amount withheld by claiming exemptions. The more exemptions you claim, the less money withheld from your check. It might seem counterintuitive, but if you claim "O" exemptions, the maximum amount is withheld from your check. If you claim "I" or more exemptions, less will be kept out of your check. But that money may come due at the end of the year when you file taxes. And remember—if you're a "dependent," meaning you're eligible to be claimed by another taxpayer (like your parents), you have to file "O."

ABC's 'Bachelor' reaches out to Wolves player Mike Davies

By Leonor Vivanco

REDEYE

Wouldn't it be cool to watch a single Chicago pro athlete on "The Bachelor"?

Well, that might be what a producer was thinking when the show reached out to the Chicago Wolves and asked about hockey player Mike Davies.

The 25-year-old forward said he got a text from the team's senior vice president of operations, Courtney Mahoney, that the show contacted the front office and wanted to meet him.

"I thought it was a joke. I thought one of the guys on the team probably called her. But, no, her next text right away was: 'I am dead serious.' And she wouldn't lie about that," said Davies, who lives in Schaumburg during the season and in St. Louis in the offseason.

Turns out the show has a casting call for Season 17 of "The Bachelor" from 1-5 p.m. July 1 at The Westin at 909 N. Michigan Ave.

Davies became a fan of the ABC shows in 2007 when he was at the University of Wisconsin and watched every Monday as Brad Womack appeared as the TV bachelor for the first time. He's been hooked ever since. Last year when Davies was injured with a separated shoulder, he started tweeting about the show.

"When I was hurt, I couldn't do anything and I'd just sit on the couch and I'd look forward to that," Davies said.

Now he has a field day recapping the episodes and adding in his off-the-cuff, sarcastic and hilarious commentary for the past two seasons on the team's site.

"I feel like I converted a lot of my friends. I feel like it's a lot of guys' guilty pleasure," Davies said. The show even has become a topic of conversation in the locker room, so much so that if a player misses the episode, others won't spoil the ending.

He's going to turn down the show because he currently is taken. But if he were single, he would consider it until he realized the cameras would follow his every move.

"There is no way I could sit down with a girl and tell her how much I love her and compliment her and all the little stuff and greet her in front of America," he said.

His girlfriend of two years has been supportive of his show blogging even though she asked him if he was going to meet with the producer. He assured her he wouldn't.

"It's not like I'm falling for any of the girls," he said. "She's better than all of the other girls I've seen on the show."

When bad meets mediocre

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

» redeyesports
@tribune.com

We're heading into a nice, gray, murky area for the White Sox.

Oh, it's so easy to get fooled. In fact, I'm in the process of fooling myself right now.

Here's how it works. The Sox win a game or two, lose a game or two, then they sweep a really bad team like, say, the Cubs. So they've won like four straight, and you think, "OK, here we go, this is it, and they're making their run." And then ... they're back to .500.

This pattern has been cited by local doctors as dangerous to your digestive system and sleeping patterns.

By the way, nothing brought more joy to the heart than to see all those empty seats last weekend at Wrigley. That means people are waking up and saying, "Hey, a mediocre team is playing a really bad team, let's ... not go!"

As it should be. Although the Bag would love to see more Saturday night games at Wrigley—and don't give me the old excuse "It needs to be quiet for residents in the area."

Yeah, people move to Wrigleyville for the peace and quiet. A peaceful enclave where nice folks can raise their kids.

No, it's an adult amusement park, and amusement parks stay open really late in the summer. More Saturday night specials, please!

Back to the Sox—I love/like/hate their rotation. Love: Jake Peavy. Like: Chris Sale, Philip Humber and sometimes John Danks. Hate: Gavin Floyd. Absolutely drives me crazy. One start: Great, unhittable, lights out. Next start: Wimpy, nitpicky, doesn't attack. The new Javier Vazquez.

And it's not the Tigers we need to worry about. The Tigers are no better than the Sox. I'm afraid it's the Tribe. Sigh.

Back to the Cubs. Awful. Unwatchable. A theory: Kerry Wood feels fine, never better. It's the team he can't stand being around.

I guess we're all waiting around for Anthony Rizzo. Always a sad thing when you're waiting for saviors in your minor leagues.

Let's pretend its football season already. Whispers from Bears mini-camp: Thank God Mike Martz is gone, receivers look great, Jay Cutler looks happy.

Oh man, wake me for September.

1	The White Sox have Dog Day, the Cubs should have God Day. They need some divine intervention this season.	... White Sox fan day. That's a good Sox fan! Yes, you are! Heel. Yes, you are!	... Seagull Day. Start a game at 4:30 p.m.	... A Look At the Future Day where they call up the youngsters. Then, keep them here.	... iPod, iPhone, iPad Day ... wait, that's every day for disinterested Cubs fans. HAHAAHAHA!
2	Why did Carlos Boozer get a vote for All-Defensive second team?	It was the alcohol talking.	The voter thought the category was, "Tallest Overpaid Native Alaskan Player."	Sam Beckett quantum-leaped into KC Joyner's body.	It's voted on by coaches, who aren't required to watch the games, apparently.	I didn't hack into the voting system just to see the reaction on people's faces. No sir.
3	What would be Shaquille O'Neal's first move if he were a GM?	Whatever it is, I can only hope it includes the moonwalk.	Call Michael Jordan and ask, "This is as easy as playing, right?"	Start building cars that fit 7-footers?	Oh, I think he'd sign himself to play alongside Dwight Howard, until Howard fires him. What?	Trade Dwight Howard to the Bulls for Carlos Boozer. Totally a good deal, Shaq. Take it.
4	How did the Fire celebrate beating FC Dallas and winning the Brimstone Cup?	I heard they put a banana in the tailpipe of Dallas' team bus.	They put it next to the BP Cup on a Chicago curb and haven't seen it since.	As long as "Call Me Maybe" wasn't involved, I'm sure it was awesome.	What the @#% does FC stand for? Can't they just be friggin' Dallas?	What happens in Bridgeview stays in Bridgeview.
5	What will the Indy 500 be like without Danica Patrick?	100 percent chance of no annoying GoDaddy.com commercials. Hopefully.	No change. Her chances of winning are exactly the same as when she raced.	The NHL without Manon Rheume. (To the Googles!)	Gray and Gloomy. Not as hot. The weather will be crappy too.	The same 800 left turns aren't gonna look much different.

SETTLING SPORTS-BASED ARGUMENTS ONE DEBATE AT A TIME

The setup: It's summer in Chicago, and baseball fans are flocking to Wrigley Field and U.S. Cellular Field. OK, so "flocking" is too strong a word, but there's no doubt each Chicago ballpark has a fun way to pregame. Which brings us to our latest debate.

This round: Better pregame activity: Bar hopping in Wrigleyville or tailgating at the Cell?

Bar hopping

Georgia Garvey

Tailgating

Lisa Arnett
LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM

VS

The biggest difference between Wrigley Field and the Cell is that when you're at a Cubs game, there's actually stuff to do nearby. There are tons of bars, shops and restaurants to choose from. When you're watching the Sox, you're reduced to charring your own dogs over a rusty grill, a six-pack of the Beast on ice in the back of your flatbed. When you're in Wrigleyville, you're bar hopping, eating delicious food and actually seeing a little bit of the city. I'd take Wrigley any day of the week and twice on a sunny Friday afternoon.

On the surface, you might assume that imbibing inside a bar is more classy than drinking in a parking lot. But when said bar is on Clark Street in Wrigleyville on a Cubs game day, that logic does not apply. Tailgating at the Cell is more spacious and far less sloppy. If someone is going to spill beer on my jersey, I would prefer it to be me out of my own clumsiness than some overserved jag I'm squished up against because the bar is at capacity. It's also a more civilized celebration. Is there a more heartwarming sight than a Sox fan sharing a bottle opener with his neighbor in the next parking spot over? I think not.

WILL SMITH GETS A NEW OLD PARTNER IN 'MIB 3'

By Miki Turner

FOR REDEYE

In the four years since Will Smith last appeared on the big screen, the two-time Oscar nominee has been producing movies with his son, developing scripts and cringing every time his daughter cuts her hair.

He's also dyed his own hair to hide those distinguished specks of gray.

But the same old outgoing and engaging Smith bounced into a conference room full of reporters recently to chat about "Men in Black 3," which opens Friday. The latest installment of the popular franchise reunites Smith (Agent J) with Tommy Lee Jones (Agent K), but adds Josh Brolin, who plays the younger version of Agent K in their quest to rid the Earth of aliens and change the course of history.

While all the fun and hilarity of this franchise remains, director Barry Sonnenfeld shot the film in 3-D, which heightens the overall experience—especially when Smith free-falls off the top of a skyscraper.

"My biggest concern with shooting in 3-D was my ears," Smith said. "I could see these things [touching his ears] taking over the whole of the screen. But when I first saw it, it was cool. It didn't have me looking like satellite dishes."

The other adjustment, of course, was his new partner, Brolin.

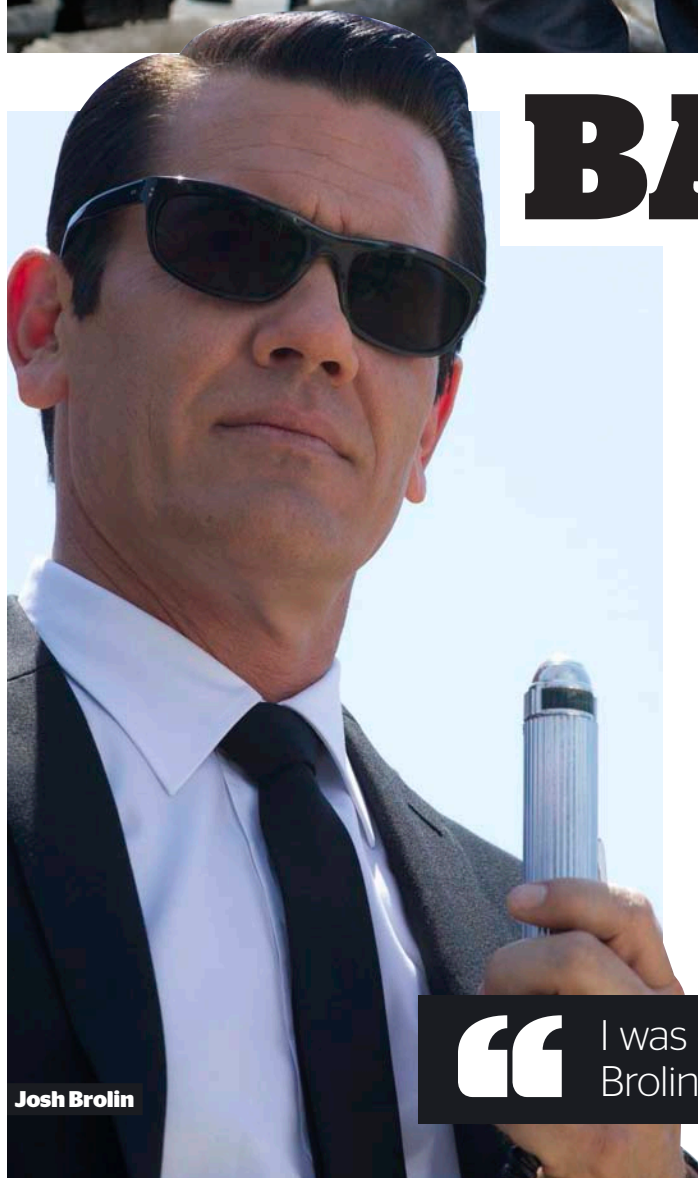

"I was expecting to make an adjustment from Tommy Lee Jones to Josh Brolin, but Josh studied Tommy so thoroughly that it was almost identical," Smith said. "It was absolutely stunning. It's crazy because you don't really even notice how good his acting is because it's so good; you're just watching Tommy Lee Jones. You don't realize that, no, that's Josh Brolin."

Brolin met Smith for the first time on set. It was a memorable experience.

"The first time you meet Will he's like 'Heeeeeeeeeeey!' " Brolin said. "You're like, 'Wow, is he serious?' It's funny though, it's like going to an insane asylum."

"As far as the chemistry goes, either it's going to be there or not. I hadn't met him before I said yes, and the minute we got together it was seamless, thank God. It was organic."

In the 10 years since the last "MIB," Smith got a second Oscar nomination ("Pursuit of Happyness" opposite his

Those are some groovy aliens, man

Newsday

Unlike Austin Powers, Will Smith won't turn into Agent J, International Man of Mystery when his "Men in Black 3" character time-travels to the groovy 1960s—no bell bottoms, no love beads, no paisley.

Yet even as undercover operative J continues to handle extraterrestrial visitors, tourists, immigrants and criminals, as he has in two previous movies, he'll do much of it now against the backdrop of Vietnam, women's rights and New York Mayor John Lindsay. Call it "Mad Men in Black."

Seven-time Oscar winner Rick Baker—the makeup-effects maestro behind the aliens in "Men in Black," the Bigfoot in "Harry and the Hendersons," the lycanthropes of "The Wolfman" and "An American Werewolf in London," and much, much more—says he's never seen the '60s-set "Mad Men." But he turned 10 in 1960, came of age in the era and remembers what aliens looked like, back in the day.

"It was a great time for somebody like me who was fascinated by monsters," Baker said by phone from his Glendale, Calif., studio, Cinovation. "There was that whole monster craze, with all those films on afternoon television, Famous Monsters magazine, those Aurora model kits [and]

Big Daddy Roth"—the cartoonist and car customizer whose signature character was the bug-eyed, tongue-flapping, drag-racing rodent Rat Fink. "We actually did an alien [for "MIB3"] that's Big Daddy Roth-inspired—not Rat Fink, but that style."

Baker, who became very choosy about his projects after winning an Oscar for "The Wolfman," said he wanted to work on "MIB 3" because he got to do something he's wanted to since the first film, in 1997: re-create the bug-eyed monsters of his youth. "Retro aliens," he said, "with big exposed brains and fishbowl space helmets and ray guns."

son, Jaden), and attached himself to several sequels including: "Hancock," "I, Robot" and a possible "Bad Boys 3." Additionally, he's started working on a remake of the 1974 Sidney Poitier-Bill Cosby comedy "Uptown Saturday Night" with himself and Denzel Washington in the lead roles, and co-produced the Broadway musical "Fela" with his wife, Jada Pinkett Smith, and Jay-Z.

Exercising these different muscles has allowed him to expand his brand worldwide. But sometimes it's nice to slip back into an old black suit that still fits.

"The idea of a secret government organization that polices and monitors alien activity on and off of planet Earth is so unique that you don't say that this movie is just like 'Men in Black,'" Smith said. "There's nothing that's just like 'Men in Black.' It's difficult to have a fantasy comedy that works on that level. ... I was excited about the degree of difficulty."

Once he agreed to do "MIB 3," Smith encouraged the writers to add some depth to Agents J and K.

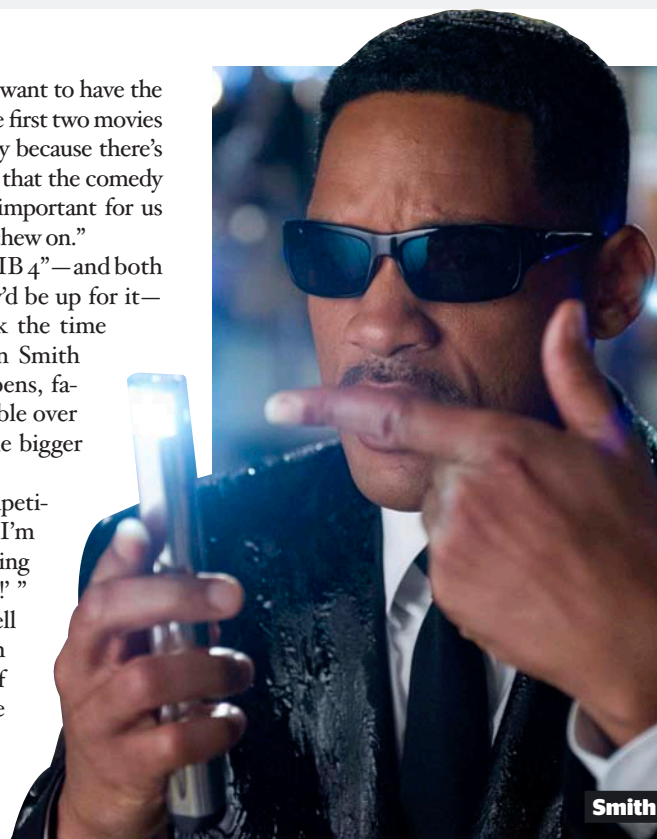

"We're all 10 years older from the second movie and different things are important to us in our lives," Smith, 43, said. "We want to have the same kind of dumb that the first two movies had—the same kind of silly because there's an appreciation of the silly that the comedy delivers. But it was really important for us also to have some meat to chew on."

Perhaps if there's an "MIB 4"—and both Smith and Jones said they'd be up for it—Sonnenfeld can turn back the time dial again and have Jaden Smith play Agent J. If that happens, father and son might squabble over who gets top billing or the bigger trailer.

"Jaden is extremely competitive. He looks at me like I'm meat! He's like, 'I'm coming for you; you have no idea!'" Smith said, laughing. "I tell him I'm going to teach him everything I know and if he works hard he'll be the second-biggest movie star in the world."

In movie time, how long has it been since 2002? So long that the vapid "Men in Black II" co-starred Lara Flynn Boyle.

Yet despite its reported $375 million budget, "Men in Black 3" arrives as a small movie in a blockbuster suit. Beneath the impressive alien effects and 3-D pointy stuff lives a story (from "Tropic Thunder" co-writer Etan Cohen) with enough emotional pull to rise above irrelevant, if south of necessary. When alien killer Boris (Jemaine Clement of "Flight of the Conchords") travels back to 1969 to kill Agent K (Tommy Lee Jones in the present, Josh Brolin in the past) before K takes one of Boris' arms, Agent J (Will Smith) time-jumps as well to save his partner and, in effect, the entire planet.

"Men in Black 3" still lacks the edge of the franchise's first effort. It stretches for swagger instead of just owning it, particularly when J's so-called attitude includes pitiful phrases like "fish-slapped" and "You look like you came from the planet 'Damn!'" The movie keeps it all moving quickly and mostly painlessly thanks to a straightforward story—as long as you don't question the rules of the space-time continuum—and frequent bonuses on the fringes. Clement's got a dynamite evil laugh; Bill Hader reveals excellent new layers to Andy Warhol; Emma Thompson and Alice Eve charm as current and past versions of Agent O; Nicole Scherzinger flaunts all the va-va-voom the PG-13 rating will allow as a woman who visits Boris in prison; and Michael Stuhlbarg ("A Serious Man") brings laughs and heart as a being who is blessed/cursed with the power to see multiple possible futures at once.

So "MIB3" inspires mildly satisfied shrugs, aside from one large stumble: The film attempts basic racial commentary by noting to J that 1969 "wasn't the best time for your people" so he can teach bigoted cops a lesson. Except in the present day a little white girl sees J and thinks he's the president, as if either she's never seen any other African-Americans or she can't tell them apart. That ain't progress; that's comedy traveling backward.

Red Tails

A crew of black pilots in the Tuskegee training program are called into World War II duty. The script by John Ridley and Aaron McGruder follows a very safe paint-by-numbers approach. The Tuskegee Airmen story is a powerful example of racism that prevented talented Americans from defending their country because of the color of their skin. The racist world they had to endure is reduced to one bar fight. The film is about 60 years too late. Had this tale of the historic Tuskegee Airmen been made in the '50s, audiences would have accepted the stereotype characters, passive approach to racism and hackneyed dialogue. By today's standards, the movie never gets off the ground.

The Grey

A group of survivors of a plane crash must battle a pack of hungry wolves. Liam Neeson stars. Unlike the traditional horror film, "The Grey" doesn't allow for passive viewing.

Joe Carnahan shot the film in sub-zero weather, giving it an authentic feel. From the men struggling to make their way through waist-deep snow to the dramatic curl of their frozen breath, "The Grey" reaches out with icy fingers to pull the viewer into the ordeal. The movie also gets strength from a script by Carnahan and Ian Mackenzie Jeffers, which sets aside time to learn about these men. These are not just victims; they're three-dimensional characters driven by a variety of factors.

DVD extras: Deleted scenes and commentary by Carnahan and editors Roger Barton and Jason Hellmann.

This Means War

This film has some very likable stars, with Chris Pine and Tom Hardy playing CIA agents—and best friends—who by chance fall for the same woman, played by Reese Witherspoon. Pine has a boyish charm and Hardy a slight bad-boy quality that makes them fun to watch. The film is at its best when Pine and Hardy are together as a spy team or as opponents in the game of love. After such a long stretch of forgettable romantic comedies, "This Means War" proves there's still some sweet and funny life left in the genre. Of course, the bar has been set pretty low. DVD extras: alternate endings, uncensored gag reel, deleted scenes, alternative opening concept and commentary by McG.

Route 66: The Complete Series

The series starring Martin Milner, George Maharis and later Glenn Corbett as friends traveling Route 66 was the perfect escapist series of the '60s. It ran during the early years of the decade, a time when young people were caught between the work ethics of the '50s and the lure of freedom that was enveloping the '60s. The weekly travels were a way to have both. The guys drove the open road—during the time before webs of freeways—in their Corvette convertible stopping only long enough to touch the lives of the people along the way. The DVD set includes all 116 episodes. Extras: Cast-crew panel discussion (1990), original car commercials, Corvette documentary. RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Meetings between a troubled child and the fairy godmother who lends a hand don't get much more woeful than sassy, redheaded Glenda (Blake Lively) nearly urinating on 13-year-old Luli (Chloe Grace Moretz) of "Dark Shadows" and "Hugo") as the young girl lies in a ditch on the side of the road.

With the Smith & Wesson .45 she received for her birthday, Luli has left her drunken mother (Juliette Lewis) behind in Nebraska and set off for Las Vegas, where she hopes to discover a world of excitement and opportunity. Featuring Eddie Redmayne ("My Week with Marilyn") as an inconsistent shadeball and bit parts for Alec Baldwin, Rory Culkin ("Scream 4") and Anson Mount ("Hell on Wheels," "Safe"), "Hick" populates itself with thinly drawn characters played by pros expected to carry the load while the script naps.

Too bad the story can't decide if it's a fantasy or a nightmare, allowing Luli to learn the value of street smarts but protecting her from any consequences of her actions. This nasty movie recognizes that kids can't expect the grass to be greener but comes too close to suggesting that you can expect others to mow your lawn.

Chicago-native director explains 'Hysteria'

By Matt Pais

REDEYE

Talk about a memorable movie pitch.

"This is the vibrator movie you can bring your mom to," says "Hysteria" director Tanya Wexler, who grew up in Lincoln Park. "You want to see something about the vibrator that you can't bring your mom to? I can tell you where to go: It's called the Internet and you can see anything that makes you uncomfortable about the vibrator you ever wanted any day of the week. I think 'Hysteria' has a little more meat on its bones."

Wexler's right. Her romantic comedy about the doctor (Hugh Dancy) who invented the vibrator in 1880 London for healing purposes—an extension of his work offering "pelvic massage" to women diagnosed with hysteria—hinges on the unlikely synthesis of Victorian England and a now widely available sex toy without the female oppression or graphic sexuality that might imply.

At the Peninsula Hotel, the 41-year-old filmmaker who now lives in New York talked about her own discovery of the vibrator, how sexuality makes people blush and why she keeps getting stopped at airports.

Without getting too personal, at what age do you feel like you became aware of the vibrator, and what would that version of yourself say if you could tell her she was going to make a movie about its invention?

[Laughs.] Gosh! Wow! I need one of these. [Fist-bumps me.] You totally just asked me a question I've never been asked. That's blankety-blank awesome. That's [bleeping] awesome. I mean, aware like I knew they existed, or aware like aware? [Laughs.]

Whatever you want to tell me ...

When did "Parenthood" come out?

1989.

So I was 19 ... so around then.

What would the 19-year-old version of yourself say knowing she'd make a movie about this?

The 19-year-old version of myself would say, "I'm going to make a movie?!" [Laughs.] I didn't know I wanted to be a film director until I was 21. Literally I remember because I thought I was going to be an actor. And if I thought I was going to make a movie at 19, I would have been like, "I'm going to be in a movie about the vibrator?"

Good vibrations

"Leave me alone; I just discovered the vibrator."

Exactly, that's what my 19-year-old self would have said. "Finally! Where have you been all my life?" As soon as I knew I wanted to direct I would not have been surprised by that.

"Hysteria" begins by saying, "This story is based on true events. Really." Why do you think people might not believe this?

[Laughs.] I don't know, what about you? Why do you think? I think that's the big joke, actually, I think the big joke is not the vibrator; I think the big joke is this really happened. This was the treatment for hysteria and the vibrator was invented for a man. It was a time-saving, labor-saving device for a guy. And probably still is. [Laughs.] When guys get threatened by it, you should be like, "Dude, we're not trying to replace you. Just give you a break!" [Laughs.]

How unfortunate is it that it's still a subject that makes people blush? Especially at a time when politically some people are trying to tiptoe—or take giant leaps—backward as far as women's rights? You'd think that after more than 100 years, people might not be so squeamish about sexuality.

It's funny, that. I think that I have as much of an inner adolescent as anyone else. So I can get all Beavis and Butthead—[laughs like

But I think that there's a difference between, "I can't handle it" laughing and, "Yeah, it's funny. It's funny when you fall off the bed and ..." And have a sense of humor. ...

It's weird to me now. I've gotten stopped at the airport so many times for having a

Hysteria R

As “Hysteria” begins, onscreen text informs us, “This story is based on true events. Really.” Indeed, what follows may be surprising to many who live in a world in which sex toys—from vibrators to replicas of Jenna Jameson’s vagina—are widely available.

Based on Dr. Mortimer Granville’s (Hugh Dancy) invention of the vibrator for the purpose of healing, not pleasure, “Hysteria” exudes a classy spunk without ever coming fully alive. In 1880 London, Granville takes on the task of giving women “the treatment” after he grows disillusioned with work at the Winchester Hospital, where his superior perceives germ theory as “poppycock.” In private practice under the guidance of Dr. Robert Dalrymple (Jonathan Pryce), Granville’s research consists of women with their ankles in the air, screaming “Tally Ho!” in ecstasy as the doctors marvel at how a little “good, steady pressure” calms their supposedly disabling condition of distracting thoughts and, uh, an “overactive uterus.”

Director Tanya Wexler and writers Stephen Dyer and Jonah Lisa Dyer err in neglecting to depict more of women’s oppression in this era, telling instead of showing the misery of an unsatisfying home life both inside and outside the bedroom. That doesn’t diminish a handful of laughs and a story about a revolution that seems to have occurred almost by accident. (Somewhere Trey Parker and Matt Stone are grinning that they got to the title “Orgazmo” first.)

As a bonus, “Hysteria” offers a rather nice subplot in Granville’s relationship with his boss’s lovely, obedient daughter Emily (Felicity Jones) and her strong, opinionated sister Charlotte (Maggie Gyllenhaal), which differentiates infatuation from love without condescending to anyone. These days, pleasure isn’t as much of a mystery as it used to be, but the dynamics that make a relationship right or wrong will always remain an enigma to unravel.

vibrator in my suitcase. Just the last few times I almost missed my plane because I’m always bringing them to people and we have little giveaways and I don’t like to check my bag. The last two times I’ve gotten stopped. The first time I was like, pulled to the side. “Do you have any powder in your bag?” “No, it’s a vibrator.” [Chuckles.] The second time, I’m like, “Dude, there’s a vibrator in my bag.”

Now I have a little Ziploc case where I keep them and I just like throw ‘em out of the suitcase and throw ‘em in the things, “There’s vibrators there!”

Hugh Dancy
in 'Hysteria'

Hugh Dancy makes 'Hysteria' vibrate

MCT

If hearing the name Hugh Dancy conjures up chick flicks ("Ella Enchanted," "The Jane Austen Book Club," "Confessions of a Shopaholic")—well, think again.

The British actor and Oxford grad recently earned a Drama Desk nomination for his work in the quirky, kinky Broadway comedy "Venus in Fur." Dancy plays Thomas, who's written a play—an adaptation of a 19th century erotic novel by Leopold von Sacher-Masoch, the guy who gave masochism its name—and Nina Arianda is Vanda, a ditsy yet devastatingly manipulative actress auditioning for the lead.

Then there's "Hysteria," his latest film opening Friday, in which he plays Mortimer Granville, a charming, Victorian-era physician torn between two sisters (Felicity Jones, Maggie Gyllenhaal) who's also busy inventing ... the vibrator.

Dancy, 36, who's married to actress Claire Danes, talked about the play and the film.

What's the biggest misconception about "Venus?"

That it's raunchy. I don't think it is. It's erotic. I think even the people who've seen it almost misremember it. Like we've both been leaping on top of each other for an hour and a half.

I've read articles where reporters ask you "So, are you really into S&M?" I gather people ask you anything now. As if you'd admit it even if you were!

Right! There's the inevitable ... "Is this you?" question. I remember saying, "I'm just so done with being asked, 'Do you take your work home?'" And Walter Bobbie, our director, said "The play provokes these discomfiting questions." I said, "Well, you're more politic than I am, because I tend to tell people to get lost."

Then again, you're kinda asking for it, doing a play about S&M, and now a film about vibrators. Dude ... people are gonna talk.

It's true. The film, though, has a good cast: Jonathan Pryce, Rupert Everett, Maggie Gyllenhaal, Felicity Jones.

Then you've got "Dorothy of Oz" out later this year.

Yes, an animated movie. I've never done one before. I play Marshall Mallow, a policeman ... made of marshmallow. It was great fun.

What intrigued you about this vibrator movie?

The script—some parts are almost farcical comedy and others quite serious. I'm in the whole movie, and have to straddle those parts—that was the appeal. Also ... the invention of the vibrator—it's a good line, right?

How do you and Claire handle separation time—when she's off shooting "Homeland" and you're here?

Not being on a completely predictable schedule can have its advantages. It can be disruptive, but if you go off to do this thing that really enriches you, that can be quite healthy. We just negotiate it as it happens.

Childhood wish comes true for 'Hatfields & McCoys' star

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

» @showpatrol

When Matt Barr was 15 years old, he "somehow" got from his hometown of Austin, Texas, to Dallas and into a screening of Kevin Costner's 1999 film "For Love of the Game." He walked up to the actor and told him, "Someday I'm going to grow up and play your son in a real movie."

So it was a no-brainer for Barr, now 28, when he was offered the role of Johnse Hatfield, the conflicted son of Costner's Devil Anse Hatfield, in History Channel's three-part drama "Hatfields & McCoys."

"I always legitimately idolized Kevin Costner. I grew up a boy in Texas and I wanted to make Westerns. You know Kevin's a pro at that," Barr said during a phone chat Wednesday. "And so I had always wanted to work with him. ... Life has a way of going full circle."

The six-hour miniseries recounts the true story of one of America's most famous feuds. The bloody battles between the Hatfield and McCoy families started shortly after the Civil War in the backwoods where West Virginia and Kentucky meet, nearly sparked a war between the two states and claimed the lives of more than 15 people over 25 years. And it all started over timber rights, the ownership of a pig and a pair of star-crossed lovers.

The feud fizzled in 1888 but wasn't officially ended until 2003, when descendants of the two clans signed a symbolic truce.

Johnse Hatfield was half of that 19th-century Romeo and Juliet who fueled the feud, a boy who fell in love with Roseanna McCoy (Lindsay Pulsipher), the daughter of his daddy's friend-turned-deadly-enemy, Randall McCoy (Bill Paxton). As in the real-life conflict, their doomed love affair plays a major part in the miniseries, which draws heavily on historical accounts.

Johnse's love for Roseanna crushed his father, who felt his son betrayed his duty to the family. Barr found that father-son tension fascinating, and not just because he was acting opposite Costner, an Oscar winner for his epic 1990 Western "Dances with Wolves."

"I think no matter how much you disagree with your own father, you want him to be proud of you," Barr said. "You want your dad to love you. People spend their lives trying to earn that sometimes from their parents. I just found that very beautiful and very tragic."

Barr, who has starred in such series as "Harper's Island" and "Hellcats," didn't get reacquainted with Costner until he got to Romania, where the cast lived together at a ski resort while filming in the Transylvanian Mountains.

Barr said he mentioned that they had met before, and that he still had the photo taken of the pair in 1999.

"We talked and talked for days about it," he said, laughing. "It was pretty cool."

What to bring to 6 new BYOB restaurants

By Erin Brereton | FOR REDEYE

Looking for a new restaurant to work into your BYOB routine? A handful of options have opened within the past few months, with flavors ranging from Colombian to Thai to Italian. We tapped the ones who know best—the chefs and owners—to weigh in on what beer or wine would best complement the cuisine, plus share ideas about other spikeable drinks on the menu.

Melao Latin Cuisine

MELAO

3941 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-868-4501

Dish-and-drink combo: A medium-bodied cabernet would go well with this Colombian eatery's grilled churrasco strip steak ($14.95), served with plantains, fried yucca and potatoes, owner Claudinette Rojas said. Diners also often pair beer with the beef, chicken and spinach-mushroom empanadas ($1.25).

Other sipping selections: Bring a bottle of rum to this North Center restaurant to spike juices such as passion fruit and blackberry ($2.75; $3.25 with milk).

Local liquor supply: Houston Liquor & Foods (1829 W. Irving Park Road 773-868-1211)

Corkage fee: None

BRICIOLA

937 N. Damen Ave. 773-772-0889

Dish-and-drink combo: Homemade pasta dishes at this Italian restaurant in Ukrainian Village include ricotta-filled tortelloni pasta topped with a brown butter-sage sauce and hazelnuts ($16), which chef/co-owner Mario Maggi recommends pairing with a chardonnay. The Milan native also suggests picking up a bottle of pinot blanc for the potato-crust salmon ($22).

Other sipping selections: No hard liquor

Local liquor supply: Ola's Liquor (947 N. Damen Ave. 773-384-7250)

Corkage fee: $3 wine service fee per bottle

NAMO THAI

3900 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-327-8818

Dish-and-drink combo: Chassie Dejatibong, owner of this North Center eatery, said a robust red wine such as cabernet would work well with the spicy Angry Tiger ($18), steak marinated with Thai herbs and served with sticky rice and salad. She suggests a sparkling white wine to accompany the signature lobster pad Thai ($16).

Other sipping selections: Juice drinks such as cranberry and acai juices with lemon-lime soda ($4) would do well with a dose of rum or vodka.

Local liquor supply: West Lakeview Liquors (2156 W. Addison St. 773-525-1916)

Corkage fee: None

EL RICON AZTECA

1752 W. North Ave. 773-770-3531

Dish-and-drink combo: Cynthia Valenzuela, who helps run her father's Mexican eatery in Wicker Park, said most diners bring domestic and imported beers to down with dishes such as the Gringa, a marinated pork-, onion- and chihuahua cheese-stuffed quesadilla ($3.99). Lighter lagers help offset the spiciness of the complimentary roasted peanut salsa.

Other sipping selections: Micheladas (made with tomato juice, lemon, soy sauce and salt, $1.50) can be topped off with beer you bring.

Local liquor supply: Foremost Liquors (3301 W. North Ave. 773-772-2200)

Corkage fee: None

BIG G'S PIZZA

3716 N. Clark St. 773-281-2444

Dish-and-drink combo: The mac 'n' cheese pizza ($3.75 a slice, $24 a pie) made with a cream-based sauce is this Wrigleyville pizzeria's top seller. "Every age group goes nuts for it," said co-owner Jaime Ganed, who recommends washing it down with light beer.

Other sipping selections: Spike your Coke ($1.25 a can, $2.50 for a two-liter bottle) with whiskey to match the Jack Daniel's-infused pulled pork pizza ($3.75 a slice, $28 a pie).

Local liquor supply: Gold Crown Liquors (3425 N. Clark St. 773-935-1700)

Corkage fee: None

DADDY COOL'S

2200 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-697-4576

Dish-and-drink combo: At his casual counter-service spot in Logan Square, owner Rich Kewitz suggests sipping a hoppy wheat beer with the homemade tamales ($2.59, plus $1.49 to add shredded cabbage, pico de gallo and chihuahua cheese). "A drink with good body will counter-balance some of the spiciness of the chicken tamale," he said. "For the squash tamale, I'd recommend a pinot grigio."

Other sipping selections: Milkshakes such as the tangy orange Dreamsicle ($2.99 for 12 ounces, $4.99 for 20 ounces) could be kicked up a notch with a touch of vanilla vodka.

Local liquor supply: Foremost Liquors (2300 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-278-9420)

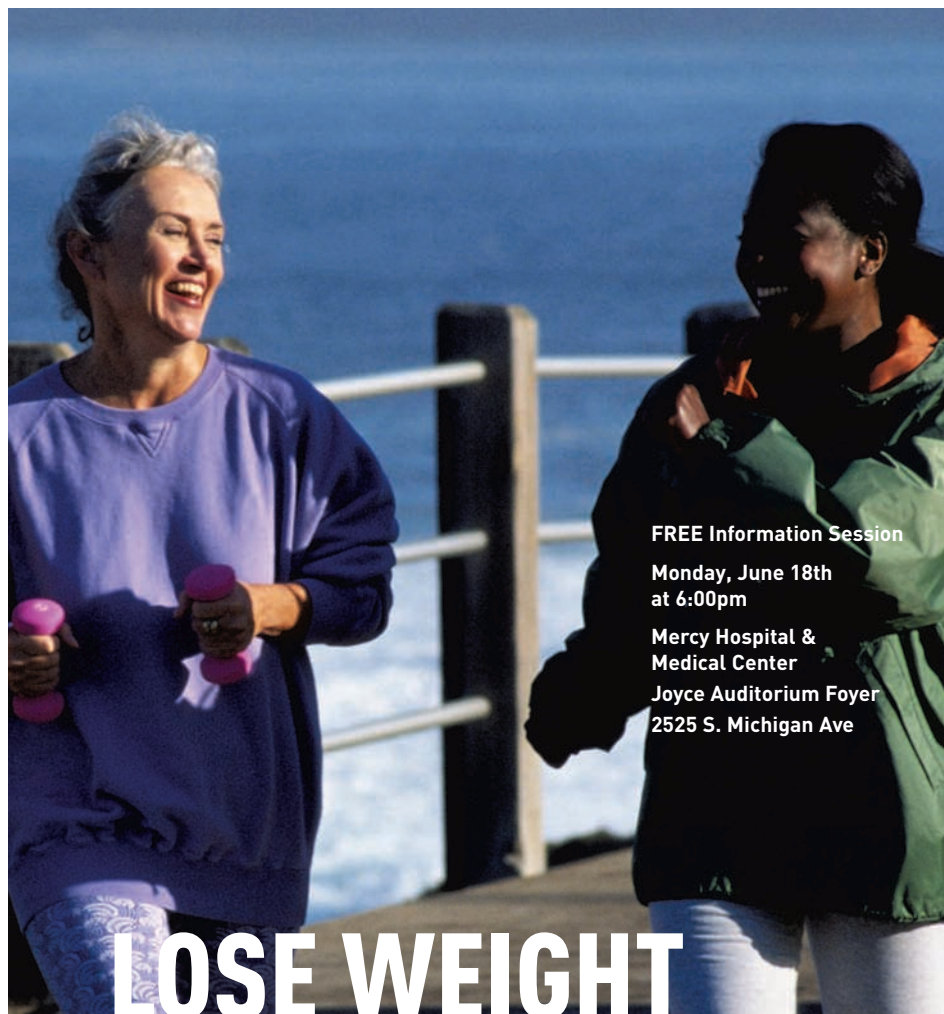

Corkage fee: None for now. Kewitz said he may institute a small corkage fee this summer.

MOLE DE MAYO

Time: 11 a.m.-9 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

Location: Peoria Street between 18th and 16th streets

Cost: Free

The name says it all: You won't want to hop back on the Pink Line until you've tried a few different types of mole, a savory sauce typically served over meat that can include a variety of chilies, spices, tomato and even chocolate. Restaurants including Fogata Village (1812 S. Ashland Ave.), Las Palmas (1835 W. North Ave.) and Decolores (1626 S. Halsted St.) will be serving up their mole recipes and other Mexican favorites all weekend.

Got luchadores? Nope, you aren't seeing things. The Galli Luca Libre wrestlers (aka luchadores, those masked Mexican pro wrestlers) will perform matches from 6-8 p.m. Saturday and 4-6 p.m. Sunday.

Dance off those calories: Full from your third round of churros? Shake it off as DJs spin Latin rock and mariachi and folk artists perform throughout both days. Saturday's headliners include Chicago-based Sones de Mexico, a two-time Grammy-nominated Mexican folk group.

Mole de Mayo hits Pilsen, more weekend festivals

By Emily Van Zandt | REDEYE

As if Memorial Day weekend wasn't busy enough with the opening of patios, beer gardens and Chicago beaches, this weekend also is packed with fests. On Saturday and Sunday, you can opt for dancing in the Lakeview streets at the Belmont-Sheffield Music Fest or digging for buried (old) treasures at the first Randolph Street Market of the season. But for those seeking a full belly, there's no better place to be than Pilsen for Mole de Mayo, a party dedicated to good Mexican food, music and more.

Latin flavor

Brewers heading south of the border

Chicago Tribune

Page through a cookbook like Diana Kennedy's "The Cuisines of Mexico" or watch Rick Bayless on "Mexico One Plate at a Time" and you'll quickly notice that many of the recipes feature bounds of ingredients that, when combined, add up to that nebulous phrase "depth of flavor."

Because Latin flavors are complex, yet familiar, it isn't surprising that suddenly a number of breweries are looking to the cuisine for inspiration, says Randy Mosher, creative director of 5 Rabbit Cerveceria, a Chicago-based brewery that exclusively produces beers featuring ingredients common to Latin cuisine such as ancho chilies, piloncillo sugar and passion fruit.

"We have a generation of people with easy access to Mexican food and cuisine," he says. "It is kind of widespread, so as people seek to make more distinctive beers it is only natural that those flavors would pop up."

For instance, 5 Rabbit's witbier, called 5 Lizard, features coriander, which is typical to the style. But it also features a slew of other spices and passion fruit, which gives the beer a slightly tangy, spicy flavor.

Both New Belgium and New Holland recently released beers inspired by mole poblano, the thick, rich, chocolate-tinged sauce native to Puebla, Mexico. The sauce is undoubtedly complex: Kennedy's recipe featuring more than 20 ingredients, including three

TRY IT

5 Rabbit's 5 Lizard: A cloudy yellow beer with coriander and citrus aroma and a sweet, grassy flavor with bright citrus notes.

New Belgium Cocoa Mole: A ruby-colored beer with an extremely complex aroma that brings to mind chocolate, cinnamon and chilies. That smell carries over to the beer's flavor, which has a sweet chocolate flavor that melds with spicy notes, particularly in the finish.

New Holland El Mole Ocho: A mahogany-hued beer with a distinct spicy and smoky chili aroma and a rich, creamy, chocolaty flavor with a hint of fresh chilies.

kinds of chilies (mulato, ancho and pasilla), four seeds (pumpkin, anise, coriander and sesame), cloves, peppercorns, tomatillos and almonds.

New Belgium's beer aimed to bring the sauce's complexity to a brew, yet with fewer ingredients. "The basic concept is complex—marrying the flavors of chocolate, which is complex on its own, with chili peppers," says Grady Hull, New Belgium assistant brewmaster.

The turn to Latin flavors for inspiration seems likely to continue because they offer brewers new ideas, he says.

"The whole craft industry is looking for something new and fresh," Hull says. "IPAs have been done; stouts have been done. So it makes sense that we're looking to foods we know and like to explore new flavor combinations."

5 date ideas for night owls

The Date Report

There's something about meeting up with someone after 11 that screams "booty call," but let's collectively drag our minds out of the gutters for a moment and embrace midnight dating.

Some people have jobs that get out late, some people don't have work the next morning, and some people are just night owls. In other words, traditional date times don't work for everyone. Luckily, there really is something romantic about wandering around a city once everyone else has gone to bed. And there is something sweet about bidding each other a (relatively) chaste goodnight once the sun has started to come up.

In case you're in need of a few date ideas for the midnight hours, here are five that will keep you entertained during the witching hour.

1. Midnight showing

Do you know how many people go to a midnight showing on a Tuesday night? Very, very few. Which means the theater is all yours: sneak in food, make out and shout to the characters on-screen as much as you like.

2. Milkshakes and fries

The beauty of a 24-hour diner is that you can get anything, at any time of night. Which means a 4 a.m. milkshake shared with two straws is totally possible. Or pancakes. Or endless cups of coffee as you talk about anything and everything until morning.

MISSED CONNECTIONS | LINE OF THE WEEK

Man for woman / Purple Line / Wednesday

“Hello yellow sweater, purple skirt, and sunglasses! I could of sworn we were staring at each other. I thought you were lovely!”

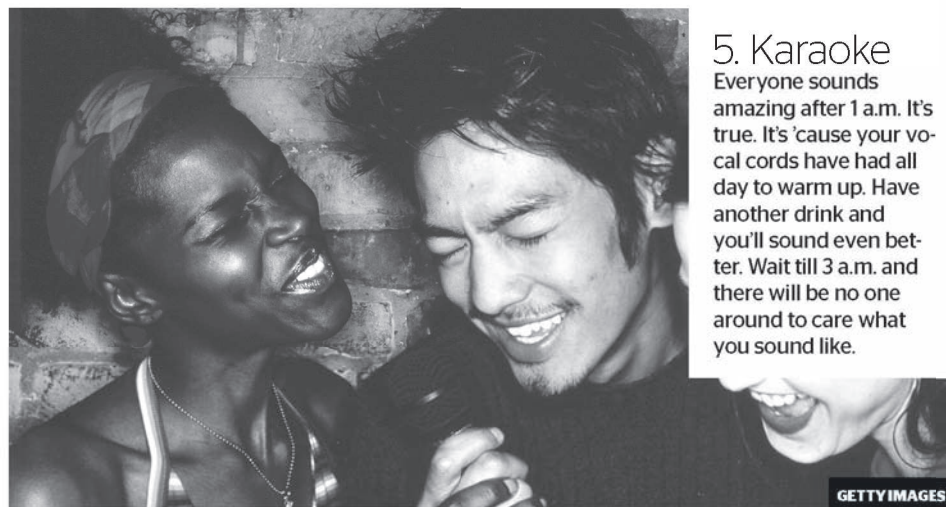

3. Catch the sunrise

Everyone knows sunsets are romantic. But sunrises are seriously underrated, and you probably don't see them very often. Either stay up all night or arrange to meet 20 minutes beforehand. Find an eastern-facing viewpoint, bring a Thermos of coffee and enjoy the view. (Breakfast afterward, obviously.) JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE FILE PHOTO

4. Midnight run

If you and your date are athletic, you might enjoy a midnight run or cycle through the city (or country!). Strap on some reflective gear and zoom through the major sites at night. The city is your oyster track! Afterward, you can reverse carb-load at a diner. (See No. 3.)

5. Karaoke

Everyone sounds amazing after 1 a.m. It's true. It's 'cause your vocal cords have had all day to warm up. Have another drink and you'll sound even better. Wait till 3 a.m. and there will be no one around to care what you sound like.

5 texts to send after you get someone's number

The Date Report

It can be tricky to make the transition from talking in a bar to sending messages, while still keeping whatever connection you may have had alive long enough to get to that first date.

For this reason, we're actually fans of texting the person that same night, so it's more a continuation of the conversation you were having when said phone numbers were swapped, while your great personality is still fresh in his/her mind.

But what exactly should that text say? Here are five ideas:

1. The jokey text

Try something obviously absurd like "wait did you pickpocket me? my wallet's gone," or something that similarly starts a conversation without announcing that you're going to start a conversation.

2. The conversation continuation

A great way to smoothly keep your convo going is to refer to it directly in your text, like "ok just read (that article you'd been talking about). We need to discuss."

3. The forward flirt

Maybe you want to take things up a notch? Go with something suggestive but unambiguous, like "It's too bad you had to leave, we didn't have time to make out."

4. The random question

This is a riskier one, but sometimes you just plain can't think of anything to SAY. You're drawing a blank on what the two of you actually talked about at the bar, so you might need to initiate a brand-new conversation. Instead of sending a standard greeting, try something out of the blue, like the thought just popped into your head and you HAD to text the person. Maybe: "i totally forgot to ask, and this is really important: do. you like. Bio-Dome?"

5. The direct-to-date

If you were able to chat with the person for a while before trading numbers and parting ways, you want to be careful not to dither too much with silly conversation before actually asking the person out (flirty texts with no action in sight become unattractive rather quickly). So consider making that first text, "Very much enjoyed our conversation, and I'd love to continue it. How's Thursday?"

It's a Ben Folds Five kind of party

RedEye Sound Board

As if the World's Largest Block Party wasn't large enough.

Organizers of the 28th annual outdoor festival in the West Loop announced Thursday that Ben Folds Five will headline the Friday night concert this year.

Past performers have included Barenaked Ladies, "American Idol" alum Kris Allen, Cobra Starship and Spoon. Saturday's performer will be announced soon.

The two-night, two-block party allegedly is one of the top spots for Chicago singles, as Oprah has claimed it has produced more than 70 marriages after couples met there and later married. Attendance reaches about 20,000 each year, the organizers said.

IF YOU GO

When: June 29-30

Where: Madison Street and Des Plaines Street

Cost: $40-$45 per night, $75 two-night pass; includes four beverages (beer, wine, soda or water)

Calling Chicago's hottest servers

We all know Chicago's a great-looking city, especially in the summer. Now, RedEye is taking nominations for our second annual Chicago's Hottest Server contest at redeyechicago.com.

Send in the name and place of employment of your pick for Chicago's hottest server (not bartenders; we've got a separate showdown for them). Be sure to include a photo and yes, you can nominate yourself.

We'll collect submissions until 5 p.m.

Wednesday, then narrow the contenders to 10 waiters and 10 waitresses. (Subject to change based on submissions.) Your votes at redeyechicago.com will determine who moves on from round to round to become the 2012 Chicago's Hottest Server winners, who score prime exposure with a photo and feature in RedEye.

CNN

So much for Instagram? Facebook on Thursday launched a photo-sharing app called Facebook Camera, which aims to make it simpler for the social network's users to upload and browse photos on smartphones.

The news comes only weeks after Facebook spent $1 billion on similar photo-sharing app Instagram. And only days after the company's initial public offering got a lukewarm reception from Wall Street and raised the eyebrows of financial regulators.

The company says the app, which will be available late Thursday for Apple iOS devices, makes Facebook photos more fun and accessible.

"When you launch the app, you'll see a feed of just great photos from the people you care about," the company said in a press release. "You can swipe to see more of any album or tap to enlarge an individual photo."

The app lets users crop photos and add colorful filters. And people who use the app also can upload multiple pictures at once. "Just select the shots you want to share by tapping the check-mark on each photo and then hit post," Facebook's statement says.

The app gets generally good marks from early reviewers, who say it is much faster than the primary Facebook app and displays photos in a large, crisp fashion.

But the comparisons to Instagram are confounding tech bloggers, who are trying to figure out to what degree Facebook was influenced by the company it purchased.

Mike Isaac, a writer at the blog All Things D, calls the app "Instagram redux," since the release comes so closely on the heels of the company's purchase of that startup.

While there are key similarities between the apps, he writes, Facebook "was most likely working on this product long before buying Instagram was ever a real possibility."

At the blog VentureBeat, Sean Ludwig writes that Facebook Camera was "clearly influenced by [Instagram]. Once the Instagram deal does close, we expect the lines to blur even more," he says.

Ellis Hamburger, writing for The Verge, had a more critical take:

"Had the Instagram deal never occurred, Facebook Camera wouldn't really be much of an Instagram competitor anyway, lacking any mobile-only social circles, hashtagged sharing around specific topics, tilt-shift, and interesting filters, for that matter," he wrote.

TODAY IN THE YEAR ...

1925: John Scopes was indicted in Tennessee for teaching Charles Darwin's theory of evolution.
1935: Babe Ruth hit the 714th and final home run of his career for the Boston Braves, in a game against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Some of the biggest names in entertainment and sports will soon visit our city on vacation (NBA stars especially like to do this) or because they live here part time (you can count on plenty of Vince Vaughn and John Cusack sightings this time of year). But most of the bold-face names coming our way will be here for performances, appearances or to film a movie or TV show.

Here's a look at the events that will bring in the most and biggest stars to Chicago this summer—from a world-famous music festival to a lesser known 5K race that will get a boost of "tiger blood" this year:

'RELANXIOUS' FILMING

Celebs: Olivia Wilde, Jason Sudeikis, Fred Armisen, Brie Larson

THE BROTHERS OF THE SUN TOUR

Celebs: Kenny Chesney, Tim McGraw, Grace Potter and the Nocturnals, Jake Owen

WADE'S WORLD WEEKEND

(Aug. 25-27)

Celebs: Dwyane Wade (11) (details have yet to be announced, but the Miami Heat star's past charity events included appearances by Common (12), Gabrielle Union, Tyrese Gibson, Chris Paul and Estelle)

She's voiced Smurfette and stars in her own documentary coming out this summer—so is Katy Perry ready to make the switch from music to movies? “That’s a lot of responsibility,” Perry told eonline.com, stressing that she’s not fond of giving up creative control. “I think that it can sometimes come back to shoot you in the foot. So, we’ll see.”

The MTV Movie Awards aren’t until June, but we already know one winner: Emma Stone. The star of “The Help,” “Easy A” and “Superbad,” among other flicks, will be honored with the inaugural MTV Trailblazer Award for compiling a “diverse resume that defies genre and keeps her fans guessing,” the network announced Thursday. The awards air live at 8 p.m. June 3.

‘Summer’ lovin’

Kanye West debuted his new film, “Cruel Summer,” on Wednesday at the Cannes Film Festival in a giant white pyramid because ... well, why not? Here’s what we learned about the movie: It stars Kid Cudi, Pusha T and Aziz Ansari, and is about a car thief who falls into a sand dune and winds up in a palace in a parallel universe, where he falls in love with a blind Arabian princess. Oh, that tired plot again?
